

ROLE OF YOUTH IN NATION BUILDING

INTRODUCTION:-

Youth are the building blocks of a nation. It is a fact that the stronger the youth, the more developed the nation is. If old and experienced people are the eyes and ears of a nation, the youth are the limbs. A young man's energy, enthusiasm, vigour and vitality make him one of the most important cogs in the wheel of development. The countries which utilise their youth in the right direction are more developed. The energy and brightness of the minds of youth act as torch-bearers for a nation.

YOUTH ARE THE PILLARS OF THE NATION:-

The future of politics, the economy, technology, and medical science lies in the hands of the youth. The issues the globe is currently experiencing include famine, joblessness, climate change, and other forms of pollution. The future generation has the solution to all of these issues. The youthful brains of today will become the leaders, inventors, builders, and innovators of tomorrow.

INDIAN YOUTH; UNLOCKING IT'S TRUE POTENTIAL:-

India is a large nation—its population is approximately 1.4 billion. Of this, 65% is the population of people between 18 years and 35 years who can be technically called the youth. The young men of India come from various strata and are engaged in a variety of occupations but all of them have one thing in common—their energy and their idealism. It is their uncorrupted mind and unspent strength which can be of immense use in nation building activities.

CONCLUSION:-

Youth is considered to be the voice of the nation. They are filled with immense potential, enthusiasm and great working capacity. They should be guided properly in the right direction so that their talents, potentials and creativity can be utilised very well for the development of the nation. They are like the raw materials or resources to the nation. The way they are shaped, they are likely to emerge in the same manner. They are in need of proper guidance and support so that they can find their own way to success.
